(mastós): Typically refers to a breast, usually in a female context. It implies the breast in a biological and nurturing sense, as seen in other New Testament usages (e. g. Luke 11:27).

According to Strong's Concordance, μαστός (G3149) is translated as "pap" or "breast" and is derived from a root meaning "to suckle." This suggests a nurturing function, usually associated with females.

You can say that the use of mastos here instead of stethos is still best understood in its symbolic context rather than strictly biological, but knowing with 100% certainty that the Bible is being manipulated and the primary method is to inject innuendo, I and many see this with suspicion.
